EDITORIAL

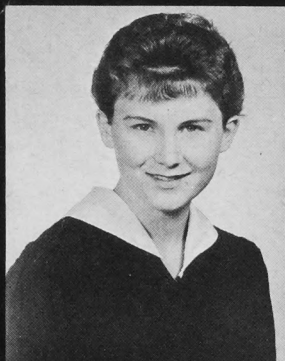

This year the Tricolor staff chose for its theme 'Scona's Golden Years' which leads us to the Question: What is it that has made our brief stay at this high school such an important and memorable one? There are unlimited answers to this question; perhaps a different one for every graduate. For some, these past three years have been an awakening. Each student discovered in himself unknown resources, and is now prepared to enter the next even more challenging phase of his life with clear-set goals and aspirations. For others, high school has been a time for slow and steady development along paths well marked out in previous years. Now they emerge, sure of themselves and their future and with a new found maturity that is a composite of many things and many people. The encouragement of an understanding teacher, the hearty friendliness of our team-mates, the thrill of winning an award or trophy and the painful process of learning to get along with other people—these are all part of us now along with many bittersweet memories.

But before we leave Strathcona behind forever, let us remember to reflect for a while on how much we really owe to our family for their loving guidance, to our teachers for their determined efforts to mix inspiration with discipline, and to our principal, Mr. Innes, for his wise and mature counselling.

To all those undergraduates returning next year, we wish the very best of luck and happiness. And may the graduating class of 1961 have the brightest and most wonderful future ever.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

BILL HRYCHUK
President

Give instruction to the wise man,
and he will be still wiser;
teach a righteous man,
and he will increase in learning.

—Proverbs 9:9

The above would suggest that there is no limit to the degree of character development a person may manifest within himself if he is simply willing to learn. It would seem, therefore, that one of the basic purposes of the high school is to awaken and stimulate this will to learn in its students. The high school must prepare each individual for a lifetime of learning whether he be educated in university or trade school.

Strathcona, during its 1960-1961 term, has presented these stimuli by challenging each and every student to respond by giving his or her very best. Strathcona's academic, athletic and social responsibilities have been met and shouldered by the student body to an extent which has made the past year memorable indeed. I am quite sure that these people will likewise bear the demands of the future as dynamically as they have responded to Strathcona's challenges.

I am thankful that this position has allowed me to become associated with many of these people. Among these workers, I include my cohorts on the Students' Executive, the room representatives, and many others who contributed to this highly successful term. I also thank Mr. Innes, Mr. McNaught, and especially Mr. Houghlund, our adviser, for their assistance along the way. To the Graduating Class, I wish the greatest fortune in all their future ventures, while to those who will remain, the greatest success in responding to the challenge offered by Strathcona Composite High School.

VALEDICTORY

We are gathered here to say farewell to our school, and to each other, for each of us is about to strike out into life along a different path.

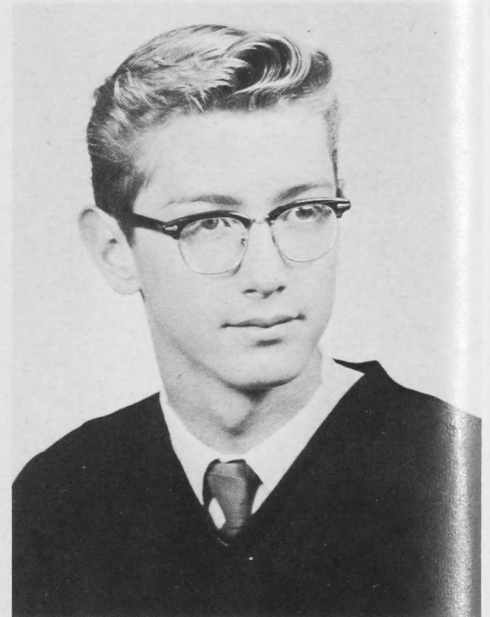

It is now, on looking back over the few years of our stay here, that we realize the value of what our school has given us.

We have gained a part of the knowledge and wisdom of our teachers and the authors of our texts. This beginning, however, is not sufficient to carry us through life, nor is it all we have found here in our halls and classrooms. We have acquired through our curricular and extra-curricular activities a sense of the most important of all human achievements, that is to say, of brotherhood and friendly co-operation.

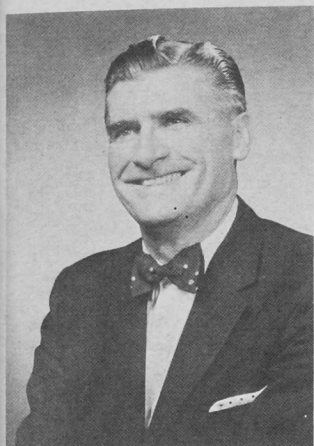

But in this process of being educated, a heavy responsibility has been placed on our shoulders; two duties are now ours to carry out. First, we must pledge ourselves to do our best as individuals; second, we are bound to see that in these troubled times all men everywhere are free of the terrors of oppression and want.

Who knows what lies ahead, what the future holds in store for us? Strathcona has prepared us for life, we must now strive to succeed in our respective fields of endeavour. As Tennyson said:

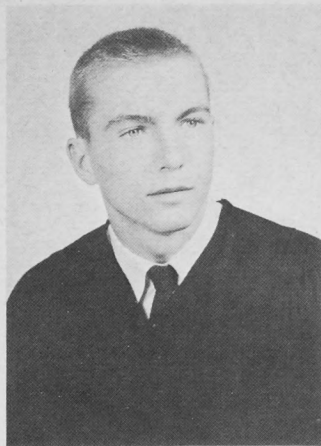

"I leave thy greatness unexpressed . . .
I leave thy greatness to be guessed."

History of Class '61

Grade XII graduation is an event we have long awaited—one we will long remember. It seems such a short time ago that we came to Strathcona and meekly faced the seniors as we clung together in our junior high groups that first day.

We now feel a growing sense of anticipated loneliness as we realize that our days at this school are numbered. Each person in our class has made an imprint on Strathcona Composite. We find, after three of our most carefree years, that we have reached a turning point where we shall be obliged to shoulder our own responsibilities—we must prove ourselves worthy of Strathcona High School.

In conclusion, I can only say with John Milton, "Tomorrow to fresh woods and pastures new."

GEORGINA SMITH
Class Historian

DEAR GRADUATE:

Just sign your name on the dotted line

For six years of college on me!
You'll get your room and books and car

And everything is free!

I really must look up to you,
You're a basketball sensation.
You'll never regret accepting, son,
This "Hired" education!

Coach.

I'll miss your gum stuck under the desk,
And your lunch on the cafeteria floor;
I'll miss your books at the Lost and Found
And your name scratched all over the door.
My farewell speech to you, dear grad,
May sound like I'm off my rocker;
But you'd be a genius if you had in your head
As much as you've stuffed in your locker!

Your favorite Janitor.

Take back your picture, Romeo!
Take all your presents, too!
It's time to change the status quo
'Cause you and I are through!
I gave you all my Freshman year,
Each morning, eve, and noon.
Now our romance must disappear!
Farewell, dear cap and goon!

Your Ex.

FROSH WEEK

Welcome Week, designed to acquaint Freshmen with school activities, started on September 7, when a giant pep rally was held in the main gymnasium. Peppy cheerleaders, dressed in maroon and gold, led the student body in lively cheers. The program also included the introduction of the Students' Union Executive.

Earlier in the week, Frosh Keepers, Sophomore and Senior students, were installed in each Grade Ten Room to help the newcomers. Large red and gold Frosh buttons were distributed.

Thursday, September 8, saw club representatives speak about the activities of various clubs on Club Orientation Day.

A talent show was held Friday noon which included mainly Freshmen and some Senior representation. In the evening, the Frosh Dance, the high-light of Welcome Week, was held. Grant Patrick was the M.C. and records provided the music. A Frosh Court, consisting of an impartial judge and jury, tried several Frosh, who were naturally found guilty.

Thanks go to the Red Cross Club for supplying refreshments.

SADIE HAWKINS HOP

The very popular Sadie Hawkins Hop was held on November 4. The gals dragged their favorite fellows into a realistic farmyard surrounded by a rickety old fence while a scruffy scarecrow, amidst pigs and pumpkins, surveyed the strange sight of students dressed "Dogpatch Style". A giant harvest moon glimmered over costumes made of burlap sacks and raggedy old jeans. Providing the music for this hard-time get-together was Bill Lee from radio station CJCA.

A prize of a live chicken was received by Christy Smith and Robert Suitor while Harvey Popik and Pat Suitor "tied the knot" in an impromptu marriage ceremony.

John Brimacombe was given a prize for his unique costume, a wooden barrel.

Thanks go to the Red Cross Club for supplying refreshments and also to the Activities Board and the Booster Club for the fun-filled frolic.

SWEETHEARTS' SWIRL

It was a memorable evening for Sharon Lambourne, for she was crowned queen of the annual Sweethearts' Swirl, held this year on February 18, in the gymnasium. Romance was the keynote as couples danced under a canopy of red and white streamers and crimson hearts to the strain of music provided by Frank McCleavy's orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Innes, Mr. and Mrs. Bull, Mr. and Mrs. Hougland, Bill Hrychuk, and Carol Marshall acted as patrons for the dance.

Highlight of the evening was the crowning of Miss Scona. Bill Hrychuk presented Miss Lambourne with a beautiful bouquet of red and white carnations while Mr. Innes placed a tiara on her head, and Miss Soper presented the symbolic cup. Other contestants were Diane Bossenberry, Barb Buckler, Louise Conn, Shirley Moisey, Lorna Saunders, and Pat Suitor.

An enjoyable time was had by all.

GRADUATION EXERCISES AND DANCE

Receiving their diplomas on May 26, at the Graduation exercises were 360 graduates. Class Historian was Georgina Smith, and the Valedictory Address was given by John Greene. The invocation was given by Reverend F. U. Bruce, and the guest speaker, Dr. W. Mackenzie, addressed the Graduating Class.

The Jubilee Auditorium was the scene of the banquet and dance on May 27. The toast to the graduating class was given by Larry Sowa, and Bob Miller replied. Mr. D. R. Innes replied to the toast to the school given by Deahn Bruce. Rene McElroy toasted the parents and Dr. W. E. Smith replied.

Music for the dance which followed the banquet was provided by Frank McCleavy's orchestra.

Strathcona's drama wing rang with sprightly music this year as the 1960-61 Yearplay, "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" went into production.

Nola Moar, Pat Ure, and Donna Gamel took the feminine leads while Les Petry and Byron Harker played the romantic opposites. Hedy Wintrobe and David Estrin acted in major supporting roles.

Colour, laughter, and song were the keynotes of the happy musical, set in the "roaring twenties" flapper era. It tells of two young girls, Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kembrough, who set off alone on a voyage to Paris. The various escapades and romantic entanglements encountered by the couple on their journey and subsequent stay in the exciting French city provided three evenings of hilarious entertainment on February 23, 24, and 25.

Under the excellent direction of Mr. Pimm and his assistant Joyce Grant, another successful venture has been added to Strathcona's list of Yearplay triumphs. Special credit must go to the hard working backstage crews and their supervisors.

HOUSELEAGUES

BOYS HOUSELEAGUE BASKETBALL

This year in both the basketball and volleyball seasons the Teachers have topped the lists in the fight against the grade XII. In the basketball division the results were: Grade XII - Teachers, Grade XI - Green A, Grade X - Blue A.

SENIOR GIRLS BASKETBALL FINALS

Through hard work and active representation by the girls, the basketball season was a big success. In the senior division the Maroon House captured the laurels followed closely by the Blue House. Gold House and Green House followed respectively. The junior division was a success also with the Green House winning followed by Gold, Blue and Maroon Houses.

BOYS HOUSELEAGUE VOLLEYBALL

The boys had a very active year full of fun and hard work as the final playoffs for the volleyball titles were sought after. The results compiled after the completion of the season gave the Teachers first place spot in the Grade XII division with the Gold House capturing the first place spot in the Grade XI round and Blue House taking the first place laurels in the Grade X division. Our thanks go to all the supervisors and students taking part in making the volleyball season the success it was.

GIRLS HOUSE LEAGUE VOLLEYBALL

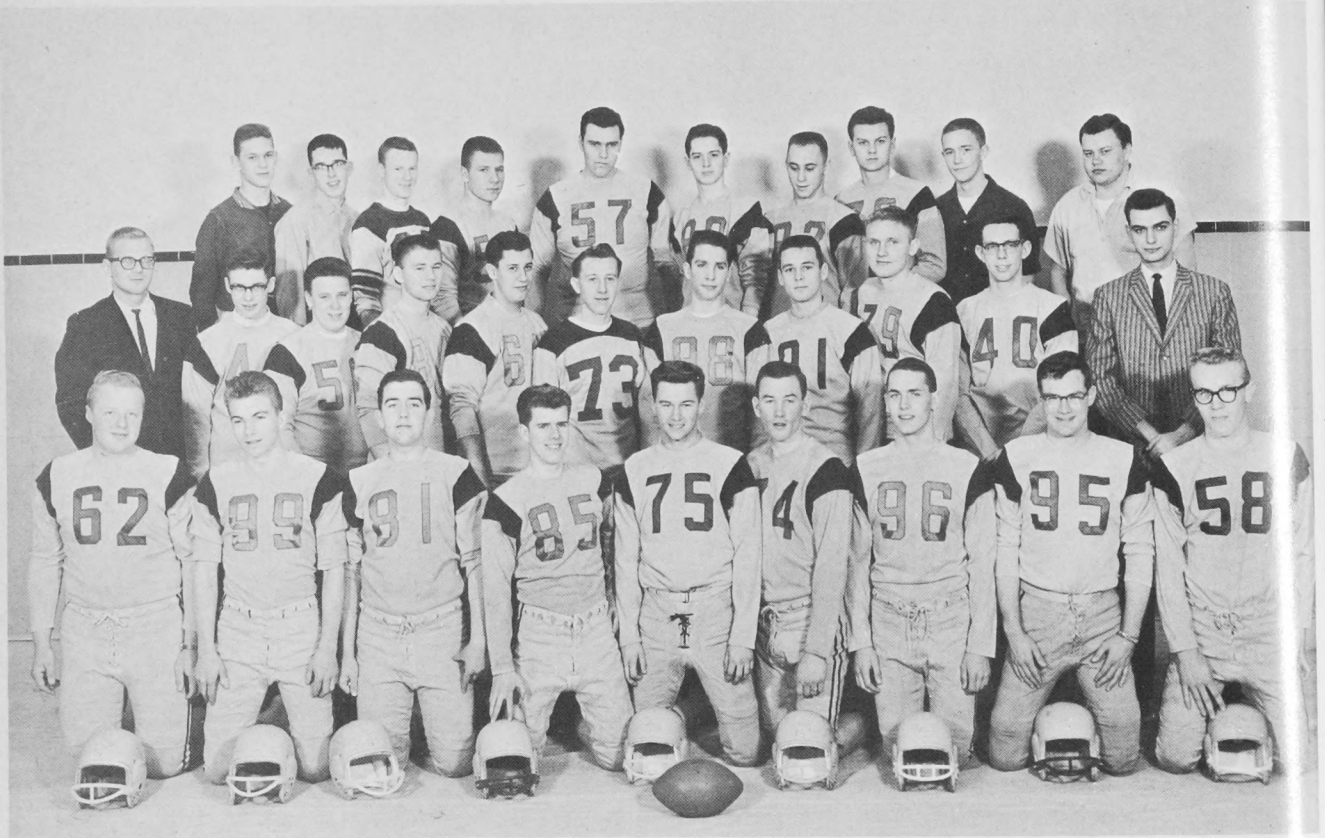

The volleyball season was very successful this year. Blue House captured the Senior division with Maroon, Green and Gold Houses following. Blue House also captured the junior laurels with the Maroon House coming in second, Gold House in third, and Green House in fourth position. Our thanks go to the advisers and to all the girls who participated in making the volleyball season a success.

BADMINTON TOURNAMENT

New to the regular houseleague activities this year was the addition of the first Houseleague Badminton tournament. Both singles and doubles events were held with Blue House winning Senior and Junior Singles and Maroon House winning both Senior and Junior Doubles. The tournament was a big success and our thanks go to all the girls who participated.

As the Tricolor went to press the boys and girls had begun to train for the track meet.

BOYS' SENIOR FOOTBALL

Row 1: Dennis Riske, John Steele, Bob Clark, Dwight Loysen, John Ball, Gary Dake, Robert Allin, Ken Rothe, Harry Greenwold.

The Lords, under the capable direction of Mr. Gilfillan, the head coach, and Mr. Breitkreutz, the assistant offence and backfield coach, managed but one tie in six starts, the tie coming against St. Mary's.

Two games later against Eastglen, it was disappointing that our injury-ridden team should lose after their fine defensive display. Since the number of Scona supporters dwindled, only the more loyal fans witnessed the final game against the league leading St. Joseph's squad. The final score was unindicative of the actual play which saw the Lord's offence move the ball fairly well in the worst field conditions.

We should congratulate the team on their clean play and their show of determination and give them more support in next season's gridiron clashes.

Row 2: Mr. Lamb, Jim Hockley, Brian MacDonald, Lorne Flack, Dave Gilbert, Paul Barber.

Like their senior counterparts, the Junior team experienced an unimpressive season. The first game, against Bonnie Doon, resulted in a tie. The rest of the season, unfortunately, saw no Scona victories.

Coach of the Junior Lords was Mr. Lamb, who should be commended for his efforts.

As the majority of the players were playing in their first year, next year's club should be bolstered with more experienced talent.

SENIOR BOYS' BASKETBALL

Row 1: Dennis Helmer, John Oberholtzer, Bill Jones, Bill Hyndman, Larry Sowa, Gary Nielsen.

Row 2: Mr. Breitkreutz, Dennis Riske, Robert Allin, Bob Manley, Terry Jellis, Don Sheldon, Gary Dake, Mr. Gilfillan.

Coached by Mr. Gilfillan and co-captained by Bill Hyndman and Bob Allin, this year's team had but three returnees. Nevertheless, their six wins in twelve starts placed them in the semi-finals against Eastglen, whom they had beaten in a thrilling overtime tussle only a week before. Although they suffered a disappointing defeat in the semi-final, the fans will remember the tense, extremely exciting victory against Bonnie Doon in the second game of the schedule. Top scorers included Dennis Helmers and Bill Hyndman. Let's hope that next year's team will receive the avid fan support that prevailed this year.

Row 2: Mr. Lamb, John Wilson, Jeff Downey, Austen Davey, Dave Gilbert, Harry Hodgson.

The Junior team started fairly well this year, although they all but lost the knack for consistent winning in the latter part of the season. Consequently their five victories in twelve games left them out of the playoffs. Co-captained by Jim Piper and Ken Martin, the teams two top scorers were David Gilbert and Alex Hardy. Thanks should go to Mr. Lamb who coached our Junior team.

SENIOR GIRLS' BASKETBALL TEAM

Row 2: Joyce Huculak, Brenda Matas, Ann Archibald, Miss Holmgren (sponsor), Pat Little, Cynthia Lazarenko.

The Senior Girls' Basketball team stood up very well against many of their competitors. After playing the schedule of five games they finished with two victories and three losses, and as two other teams had the same standing in the league, a three way tie for third place resulted. Due to their higher total points, the Scona girls' team was awarded third place, and the right to play off in the semi-finals. Unfortunately one basket for the opposition stopped the team in the semi-finals. Brenda Matas and Ann Archibald were co-captains of the hard striving team, and they had the capable guidance of Miss Holmgren.

JUNIOR GIRLS' BASKETBALL TEAM

Row 2: Arlene Burden, Christy Smith, Barbara Bell, Mrs. French (coach), Gloria Dedeluk, Marlene Coulter.

The Junior Girls' Basketball team made a fine showing as Strathcona's representative. The girls combined their ability with determination to tie with two other teams for first position. Mrs. French played an important part as the team's coach and incentive, but unfortunately the girls failed to reach their goal of first place honors in the junior league. Barbara Bell was the team's choice for captain.

SENIOR GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL TEAM

Row 1: Ann Archibald, Brenda Matas, Cynthia Lazarenko, Lynne Webb, Gael Marshall, Shelagh Pike.

Row 2: Gloria Radomsky, Sharon Monahan, Sandra Ford, Ann Murray, Joyce Huculak, Shirley Ford, Mrs. French (coach).

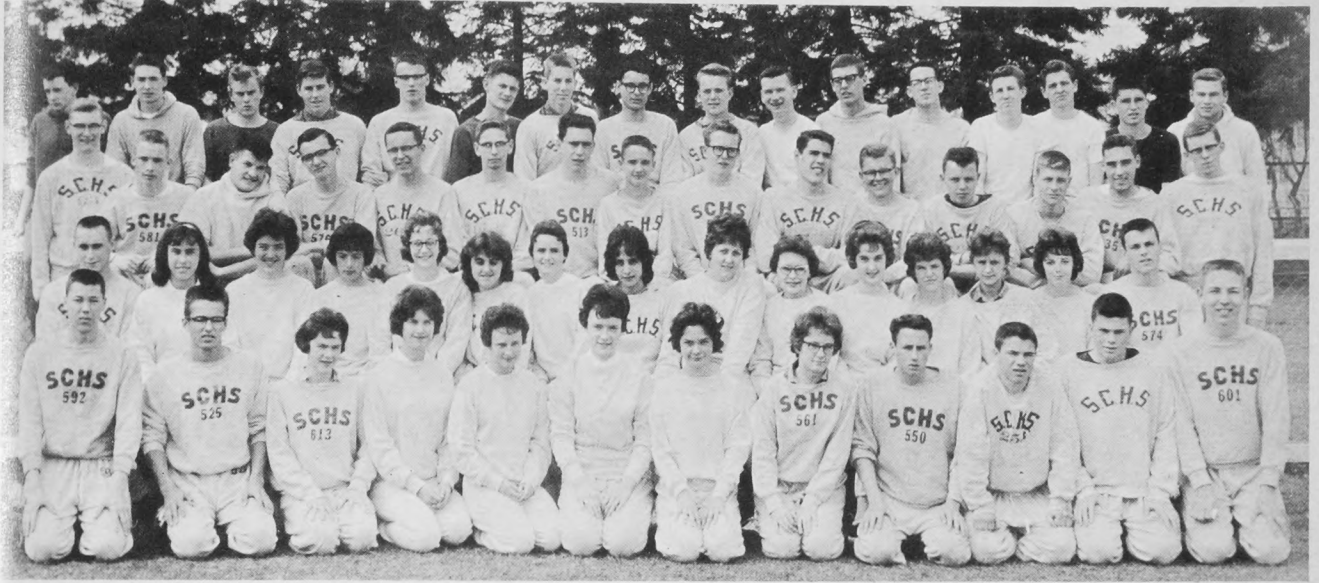

JUNIOR GIRLS'
VOLLEYBALL TEAM

Row 1: Vicky Grysdale, Gail Ozee, Karen Boddy, Joanne Winship, Denise Murray, Sheila Wilson.

Row 2: Miss Holmgren (coach), Linda Fraser, Doris Erickson, Christy Smith, Aurelie Miller, Irene Ball, Shirley Williams, Linda Grant.

BADMINTON TEAM

- Row 1: Barb Robinson, Elna Marshall, Miss Holmgren (sponsor), Anne Murray, Betty Gourlay.
- Row 2: Leo Kissau, Ron Loyer, John Oberholtzer, Rudy Kakoschke, Dick McClure.

THE SWIM TEAM

 Row 2: Clare Cragg, Lynda Manning, Sharon Hiraboyashi, Marion Hiraboyashi, Barbara Bell, Sandy Ford, Shelagh Pike, Bonnie McPherson.

SWIM TEAM

Strathcona's swim team displayed its aquatic talent at the public high schools' annual swim meet by winning two out of the three trophies offered. The Jimmy Crocket Grand Aggregate trophy was won by the combined efforts of the boys and the girls with the girls also succeeding in capturing the Dr. McKay Girls' Grand Aggregate trophy. This was by no means the first year that our school's swim team was victorious at the swim meet. These two grand aggregate trophies have held a place of honor in Strathcona's display windows for four consecutive years; a truly remarkable record.

Congratulations are well in order to these fine swimmers, their well deserving teammates, Janet Patching and Terry Nimmon who also acted as assistant coaches, and especially to their versatile coach who did a tremendous amount of work towards the victory of the swim team.

AWARDS

MAJOR TROPHIES

HARLEY - MILLAR - SUTTON TROPHY

This trophy, which is presented annually to the male student of the graduating class who is outstanding as an athlete, as a good student, and as a man, was donated by Colonel B. F. MacDonald in memory of Pilot Officer John William Harley, Flying Officer John Whitla Millar, and Flight Lieutenant Harold Ransom Sutton. These three young men, who attended Strathcona High School, were killed in the last Great War.

This year's winner is Bill Hyndman. Bill was a star player on the football, basketball, and track and field teams. He was president of this year's Graduating Class. He received a minor athletic award in grade 10 and a major in grade 11.

Bill has maintained a consistently good scholastic record throughout his high school career.

WEES TROPHY

The original Wees Cup, donated by Mr. Wees in 1929, was replaced three years ago by a new Wees Trophy. It is presented annually to the grade twelve student who attains the highest average on the Christmas and Easter examinations.

John Greene, winner of the Wees Trophy and class valedictorian has attained an average of 88.7%. After attending grade 10 at Strathcona Composite, John travelled to France where he spent his grade 11 year at "Ecole des Roches". John who has maintained a consistently high honors average is also an active member of the chess and checkers club.

GRIESDORF TROPHY

The Griesdorf Trophy was donated by David Griesdorf, a former student of this school. It is presented annually to the girl in the graduating class who is most outstanding and proficient.

The winner this year is Pat Gander. Pat, one of our most distinguished students, from an academic point of view, attained a term average of 85.9% this year. Pat, however, has also been busy in other fields. She was secretary of the Science Club at Strathcona this year, and also secretary of the city wide organization of science clubs which presented the Science Fair at Ross Sheppard High School this Spring. Pat was also President of the United Nations and Current Events Club and secretary of the Debating Club.

SCARBOROUGH TROPHY

The Scarborough Trophy was donated in 1952 as a memorial to Mr. Charles Scarborough, a former teacher at Strathcona High School, by the Students' Union of that school. Each year it is presented to a student outstanding in academic achievement and service to the school.

Bill Hrychuk, who has won the trophy this year, is President of the Students' Union and Publicity Manager of U.N. A.C.E. In the field of athletics, Bill has been a player on the Junior and Senior Football teams for the past three years, Bill's academic standing has been consistently high during high school.

HOME AND SCHOOL ASSOCIATION TROPHY

This trophy is awarded annually to the grade twelve girl who best combines athletic ability with sportsmanship and leadership in athletics. Her academic standing must correspond to her ability.

Joanne Hodgeson, this year's winner, was president of the Girl's Athletic Association and a member of the Activities Board. Joanne curled on the Girls' School Team and spent many, many hours keeping score at the Boys' Basketball games.

This year the Tricolor contests were very successful. The quality and number of entries was very good in the Short Story, Essay, Poetry and Art sections. Because of the insufficient entries in the Photography section no winner was announced.

We would like to extend sincere thanks to Dr. Elder, Dr. Kreisel, Dr. Bilsland, and Mr. Taylor who judged the contests.

POETRY FIRST PRIZE

MY FUTURE HOME

By LES PETRY

I should like to build a house,
A warm house where in relaxed, consoling atmosphere
My dreams might lie in fallow contemplation;
Yet not fallow
But as seed lies dormant in the soil
To sleep
And even die;
But then to burst in timid life
And bud, and grow and flower
With bold abandon.

In this house no woman long could stay,
In impressive charm
No thing would ever lack but
The woman's touch
So often deemed important
Would be banished from the start:
The most luxurious rugs'
Though there
Would be kept well in their place
By cuspidors
And large convenient ash trays
Placed strategically.
Ash trays in the bathroom,
Ashtrays in the hall,
And most important,
I'd have ashtrays
Placed
Alongside the elderly
But delectable chairs
That would dominate the place.

The fireplace, unscreened, will glow
And sparkle
Sometimes roar
But even in its hottest heat
No grate will hide its face
And spoil the very warmth of the thing.
(The deep shag rug be damned!)

On gleaming varnished tables
There'll be thick, fine Irish linen
Displacing frilly runners
(Dinky doilies are designed
To catch on belts and buttons)
So strategic points at my estate
On chairs and chesterfields
Will be guarded
From the woman's touch.

The bath is large, luxurious,
Water pours from eight feet high;
There's provision made for reading and
Mood music from the walls
Completes a relaxation
No woman's touch can match.

Rich draperies hung on windows
Leave no place for frills and laces
Whether hung by women's fingers
Or any other "professional" decorator.

Last, but never least, of course
A kitchen is essential.
Small; really compact;
Modern in design;
But when you come to visit me
In all my bachelor splendor
You may
If you are sharp
Notice a rather frivolous apron
Hanging in the corner.

POETRY SECOND PRIZE

IN MEMORY

By LES PETRY

He was big, and beautiful, and very black.
And I dropped my hand fondly to his fine head
And felt the love that surged between us there
As we stood, savoring
The companionship ahead
As we always did before our evening walk.
Then, we move away together
And his long ears tuned to my report
Of the day's activities, problems and triumphs. . . .

He nodded sagely; I continued.
"And so, fella', never trust a woman."
His powerful hindquarters pumped rhythmically.
We approached the barricade
Between my home
And the quiet of the local ravine,
A thoroughfare.

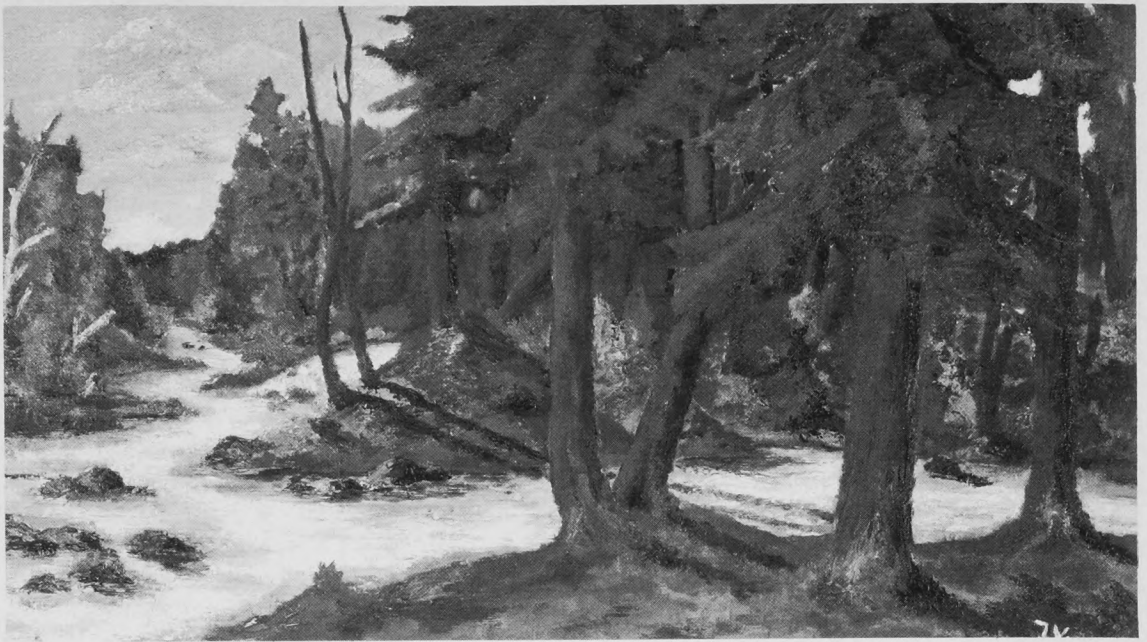

With sudden interest, he surged forward
But at my frantic shout of "Sparkle, Heel!"
Broke pace,
And then there came that scream of brakes
Before that mass of hurtling steel
Tousled
His shimmering waved-silk coat
Spattering blood as
Splintered bones pierced like lancets
Through quivering flesh.

Just one cry of pain or terror
Burst from the lungs of that great dog.
But his eyes, turned on mine,
Spoke reams.

With sudden super-human strength
I swept up his mangled form
And felt that one last surge of love
As his warm tongue caressed
My now livid cheek.

Then there was only the dead weight
Of his limp corpse
Crushing
My leaden breast.

The trim little bitch across the street
Glanced over with naive impunity
As I wept.

SANCTUARY

By GAIL HUGHES

There is a corner
 Deep within that inner sanctity of mind
 For precious thoughts and dreams.
 And when I'm weary of this trifling world
 I take a brief respite to mull and ponder
 Secret hopes.
 I sit
 And dream
 Of silver ribbons winding to an unknown land
 Where gaiety abounds—
 And happiness surrounds to wipe away despair.
 I lose myself
 Within a world which no-one else may share.

And when at last on earth I light
 Rested
 Refreshed
 At peace with man and all humanity
 I leave my fancies and anticipations
 Safe
 Securely snug
 For another day.

NEVER AGAIN

By LYNN WEBB

At the age of five I had never before visited a farm. With great expectation I waited for the long ride to end.

The first sign of my unfamiliarity with farm living was evidenced when, after searching the house from top to bottom, I drew my cousin aside and asked her an urgent question. Out the back door we marched and down a well beaten path toward the tool shed. Thinking perhaps my well meaning relative had misunderstood, I hastened to make myself clear, but I was readily assured that this was the right direction. Upon reaching the tool shed, I discovered that it was no such thing. My difficulty in understanding its principle was not enlightened by the mere explanation that on the farm they didn't have running water. However, I found it served the purpose, and galloped back to tell my new discovery to mother, who I was sure, had never heard of such a thing either.

An incubator stood in one corner of the large living room, and the chicks, their tiny peeps faintly echoing from within, fascinated me. As I couldn't open it myself, I was obliged to ask politely if I could see a little chicken up close. Everyone gathered around and the door was opened. Holding the fluffy little ball in my hand was a tingling experience. Each of us had a chicken, my own being the nicest of course. Then suddenly I felt something wet in my palm. Rain I concluded, but then dismissed this idea as ridiculous because I was in the house. Well, some chickens certainly are very rude. Strange, but I never had the desire to hold a little chicken again after that.

In the morning I awoke with the sun and plunged out into the fresh, invigorating air, scented deliciously with the odours of the farm. Air circulating through the barn, around the chicken coop and across the slough wafted past me, filling me with the spirit of adventure.

Horses! Would I like to ride one? You bet. W-i-t-h-o-u-t a saddle? Well, sure! The Lone Ranger can do it, so can I. My swift descent when the gallant steed bent his long neck for the drink he was accustomed to in the morning dampened my enthusiasm; however, I was the spectacle of so much hilarity that I didn't cry too long. But paddling out of that slimy water trough failed to impress me as funny.

Now, when anyone mentions the farm to me, I casually hasten to offer some very air-tight excuse for desisting; but even with this slight suggestion, panicky qualms threaten my composed exterior, because I know all about farms, only too well!

SHORT STORY

JUDITH GUNNING

FIRST PRIZE—PIPILO

Pipilo, a lonely little street urchin, has joined a small traveling circus on the hopes of becoming a great clown. He is happy in his new life because the other performers are good to him and he finds his first friend in Venturi, the strongman. Only one thing mars his contentment; his failure to make the people laugh. Each time he tries harder than the last, and each time he fails more miserably than before. As the story opens, Pipilo has just left the ring having once again failed to make the people laugh. Only this time the audience cheered wildly as he left the arena.

Pipilo was too dazed to understand. When Venturi came running up to him excitedly, he could only stare up at the happy face and walk on. Many others offered words of praise, but Pipilo was uncomprehending. His disappointment was unbearable. Venturi had promised him it would be different. But it was just the same. He was still the clown who could make nobody laugh.

The little circus band continued to tour the countryside, and everywhere they played, the fame of Pipilo went before them until it seemed only to see Pipilo that the people came. And stranger yet, as his reputation grew, he became increasingly morose, until only Venturi would have anything to do with him. Not long afterwards, the manager of one of the most famous circuses in the whole of the country approached him and asked him to join their company. Pipilo was reluctant to go. However he agreed if Venturi came also. But the man brushed the request aside, saying with derision:

"I have more than enough strongmen like him. But I have no clown like you."

"But I can't make people laugh. I am not even a clown," Pipilo insisted doggedly.

"No, of course you do not make them laugh. That is why they love you. The juggler makes them laugh, the acrobats make them laugh. Even the musicians amuse them. But you make them cry, and any fool knows that people would rather do that."

"I refuse to go without Venturi," Pipilo repeated stupidly.

"All right, all right," said the exasperated manager, pulling a crumpled handkerchief from his pocket to wipe his brow.

"Then I will go," said Pipilo, "it is settled."

Venturi, mending a boot inside the wagon, had heard everything that had passed between the two. When they had gone he went out into the night air to think and smoke a while. That night when Pipilo was asleep, he undid the cross from around his neck, and gently slipped it into Pipilo's curled fingers. He knew that from then on he would be only a hindrance to the boy, and that the time had come for them to go their separate ways. He quietly packed up his few personal belongings, and after pausing for a final look at Pipilo's childlike face so full of happy dreams, now . . . he left and walked out into the night mechanically.

When the circus people came for Pipilo the next day, they found him prostrate with grief. He would not cry. Lovingly he put the old silver cross around his neck, and after bidding farewell to his old friends, he said quietly:

"Let us go."

The next three weeks passed very quickly. Pipilo worked tirelessly to add a whole new group of tricks to his act. He ate little and talked less, putting every ounce of effort into improving his performance. Venturi, many miles away, yearned with all his heart to see his little friend again, if only from a distance. He made up his mind to get there somehow, for the opening performance, feeling certain that once he knew Pipilo was secure in his success, he would find it easier to loose his hold, and forget.

Opening night came and the beautifully grand arena was crowded with wealthy and important people. Pipilo walked around and around, utterly astonished at the richness of the scene. There was a whole orchestra to play for them, and all the performers were dressed in gaily spangled costumes, with feathers and beads galore. Pipilo had staunchly insisted on wearing his old harlequin suit with the silver tassels, but now he almost wished he had let them dress him too in such finery.

The houselights were lowered and the ringmaster began to announce the acts in a great booming voice, stamping his feet and smiling enthusiastically. Pipilo watched from the wings, utterly absorbed in the show. A big blonde girl in pink tights was riding two white chargers around and around the arena, to the loud approval of the crowd. Then came the animal acts, and these were a far greater thrill to Pipilo than to the audience. The crowd was becoming increasingly more jovial as the night wore on, and the six slim acrobats almost put them into a frenzy with their feats on the high-wire.

Pipilo was next. He slipped Venturi's cross around his neck, and entered the ring, waiting patiently for the crowds to notice him. He then raised the trumpet to his lips and played a mournful song of the hills that Venturi has taught him so long ago. When he had finished, he calmly set down the instrument, and went into his juggling routine. The crowd seemed to be hypnotized by him. A strange foreboding silence had settled on the joyful people. Watching him, his little face distorted with the intensity of his concentration, his head bent in fierce disappointment, there was something of their own frustrations and failures. Even his point-less persistence held a meaning for them and he won their hearts entirely. To Pipilo, as usual, everything had gone wrong. Suddenly he appeared as if inspired; he turned around abruptly and began to climb the rope ladder leading to the high trapeze. The eyes of the people followed his every movement. Once his foot slipped and a cry went up from the crowd. But he caught himself and continued to climb. Venturi watched from the audience, his hands clenched and his eyes glued to Pipilo's tiny figure now so far above them all.

Pipilo's mouth was dry. He feared heights and had always avoided them. He tried with his fevered brain to remember what he had seen the acrobats do. The drums began to roll unevenly, and the spotlight was shifted to him, leaving the rest of the arena in almost total darkness. He took a firm grip on the bar of the trapeze, and slowly let himself fall forward, but in trying to bring his legs up for the knee grip, his hands, oily with sweat, slipped from the bar. He clawed the air frantically as a deep sustained cry went up from the audience. The little body seemed to crumble on the ground like a dummy. Venturi shut his eyes and dug his nails into the palms of his hands.

Two men from the wings rushed forward to remove the body. The crowd somehow sensed that they were intruding, and filed slowly out.

Venturi remained in the stands, unable to go. Down into the deserted arena he went, and stood staring up at the trapeze which was still swinging silently above him.

"Venturi." He heard his name called from somewhere behind him and turned to see the manager, pale-faced, hat in hand, walking slowly toward him. "There is something you should know about Pipilo," he said quietly. Venturi turned on his fiercely:

"Why don't you leave me alone? He's dead isn't he?" There was a silence and the manager went on, as if he had not heard him.

"He wanted this last chance to prove himself as a clown. And then whether he succeeded or not he was going to give up the circus, and search until he found you. . . . I thought you would want to know." The manager turned and walked away, leaving Venturi alone in the vast, infinitely empty arena.

The Need For A Local Drag Strip

By BILL GROSE

The drag race is a one-quarter-mile acceleration test. There is an active interest amongst the teens of Edmonton in dragging, but, as yet, the citizens of Edmonton haven't recognized it by granting local enthusiasts a site for a drag strip.

The Sunday afternoon drags are held in several places around the city. The use of these sites for drag racing has led only to complaints from the public, as well as the parties concerned. The provincial championship drags were held at the Namao Airport late last summer. A crippled American plane had to land unexpectedly, causing a considerable amount of delay and inconvenience to both the draggers and the air force. Drags were once held at the new Nisku International Airport, but, as it is now in use, this has had to stop. Several highway sites have been closed for Sunday afternoons for drag racing. A highway in the Namao area has been used, as well as the road east of the refineries, from the Cooking Lake road to the Beverly Bridge area. This type of thing has resulted in bitter complaints from the public, and has stirred up public opinion against dragging.

A very definite danger is created if the local dragging enthusiasts are not allowed to have a drag strip. This will result in dragging on city streets and highways, which has already caused several deaths, both in Alberta and across the nation.

In spite of unfavourable public opinion, there is no harm or sin in dragging, provided it is done on a proper strip, and not on city streets. It gives the teenager an opportunity to express creatively his mechanical skill and interest and his natural urge for speed. However, not only the teenage group participate in drag racing. At the provincial championships this summer, I saw several middle-aged men taking an active part. They really enjoyed themselves, as well as clocking some good speeds. The popular belief that drag racing is dangerous in any way has no basis whatsoever. Drag races are carefully supervised, and all cars must be safety inspected before they can go onto the strip. For example, removal of wheel discs is compulsory for dragging, to prevent any danger of their flying off and causing any injury to the spectators. Injuries from drag racing are non-existent, because of the strict enforcement of safety rules and regulations. Many car clubs around the city have taken up building dragsters as club projects. This keeps the boys occupied, instead of having them driving around the streets causing trouble. Many draggers, however, use plain street cars for dragging. In tuning the cars up so that they will perform well on the strip, the person is also making it more efficient for street use.

Personally, I feel that at least a part of the old Municipal Airport should be devoted to a drag strip. Only one runway would suffice. This would allow the city to carry out other plans for this land, along with the drag strip.

High government officials have shown an interest in and support of drag racing locally, as attested by the article on drag racing several months ago in the weekend supplement to the Edmonton Journal. Let's get behind these people and support the campaign for a local drag strip.

The Decline of the Western Empire

By HANK REMPEL

To glance at our modern society is to see a resurrection of another great civilization. True, the times, places and characters have changed but the dominant characteristics of decline and decay are omnipresent. THE RECORD OF MANKIND, in its revelation concerning the downfall of Rome, actually presents the five profound weaknesses threatening the twentieth century democratic nations.

The first of these is economic. Like the dull-witted Romans, we too expect the government to perform great miracles and secure employment for us. If it fails in its endeavors, we retaliate by joining the "idle city mobs". How long will be before the hundreds of thousands on relief shout for "Bread and Games"?

Political chaos is our next threat. This problem doesn't, however, focus only on a central emperor but instead manifests itself in a more universal scope. Not only is Europe ravaged by political unrest, but practically every nation, including those of Central America, Africa and Asia is blasting its way into the bloody drama. Just as the various Roman legions were incessantly overthrowing the weak emperors, so are the peoples of the world turning vehemently on their leaders.

Democracy's and Rome's third weakness is and was one of religion. For years now, Christian churches have been telling how their wonderful religion is ushering countless thousands into "The Fold". If this is the case, why are missionaries forced out of foreign lands, and university students addicted to the satisfaction of atheism? Why do the pleasures of material gain seem so inviting and standards of humility seem so senseless? Because we have revived the dedication to the glorious goddess, Luxury.

From the religious problem rises one of social decline. While Rome's populace watched the degrading spectacles in the stadiums, our citizens keep on reliving past wars in all their glorification and allowing a lowered moral state to assert itself. Murders, robberies and assaults are relatively common occurrences which arouse little alarm in our degenerate specimens.

The fifth weakness is one of force—military force. Although mercenaries aren't generally being employed as yet, the armies of the democracies are finding it hard to maintain supremacy in the arms race. Granted, through the various world-wide agencies, sizeable gains are continually being made at upholding peaceful relations and relative co-operation, and perhaps an era exhibiting the qualities of the "Pax Romana" may be attained. But, unfortunately, history is in the habit of repeating itself and after every war, the victorious armies, under their exalted leaders, display their belligerent tendencies in the form of magnificent "Triumphs", exceeding even the splendid flourishes of the powerful Caesars. Another full-scale military contest might be the one devastating hope which will shock the Western World into overcoming its weaknesses and preserving its ideals. If not, to what fate may the declined "Western Empire" fall? Perhaps that of her predecessor: annihilation by the hungry barbarians from the East.

THE RED SCARF

By ULRIKE CONRADI

A little boy whizzed around the corner, barely missing an elderly gentleman, and aided by his fright, darted to the end of the block. Rounding the corner, he scrambled through a hole in a fence and now stood in a long alley. Dingy, red brick apartment houses ranged all along one side and a huge, wooden fence, all marked up with sidewalk poetry, the histories of backstreet romances ran the whole length of the other side of the alley. The fence in its nakedness seemed desperately trying to hide the squalor and filth that existed there.

He skirted to one of the nearer doors, quickly opened and closed it very quietly, and then stealthily crept up a long flight of creaky stairs until he came to door number sixteen. He breathed a sigh of relief and hurriedly slipped inside. It was not dark yet, and his mom would not be home for a long time. His hand, which he had tightly jammed deep into his pocket, he slowly pulled forth. In it lay all crumpled up and crinkled, a cheap red scarf.

He had got it for his mom; it was her birthday today and he knew she loved pretty, brightly colored things. On his way to school he had suddenly seen the scarf in the store and had decided he was going to get it for her. On his way home, when he came to the store he walked inside. It had many counters, but he finally found the one on which the scarf lay. He stood there a long time just looking at it, but suddenly, when no one was looking he grabbed it and ran out of the store and ran and ran and ran until he got home.

He slowly smoothed the wrinkles. It was a very beautiful scarf, a bright red with so many different colored flowers on it and right in the center there was a big red rose with all the petals open. He just stood there staring at it, feeling a tingle of excitement and joy at the thought of giving it to his mom. He knew his mother would love it for she too was beautiful. To him she was an angel or how he imagined an angel would be. She had masses and masses of golden, curly hair just like an angel and she always smiled, at least in the mornings, and told him she loved him. After breakfast, when he was ready to go to school, she would say, "Now you be a good boy today, Peter, for you know I love you and if you are naughty you will make me sad." He would make her happy for he had the scarf; he would surprise her with it.

He only hoped she would not be so strange tonight. Sometimes when she got home from work she seemed so tired and worn out and she would cough so much that it frightened him. She would hardly talk to him at all, and when he talked to her, she would tell him to be quiet and not to bother her for she was not feeling well and did not want to be disturbed. Sometimes she would have friends over, but he did not like them at all for they talked and laughed so loud, often waking him up in the night. One time he peeped inside the room and he saw them all sitting there and drinking out of funny bottles. There were so many bottles, most of them already empty. His mother seemed so strange he hardly recognized her. At other times in the evenings, however, she would be so nice to him and talk with him and read him stories. He hoped she would be like that tonight, like an angel, for it was her birthday and he was giving her a red scarf.

He sat down in a chair to wait for her. He waited a long time and it grew dark; he became so drowsy. Suddenly he was startled by the sound of many voices nearing his door, all talking excitedly, some were shouting and yelling. The door opened and a crowd of people streamed in, two of them carrying his mother. One man, a big fat one, who was commanding and waving his arms a great deal, finally told the others to lay his mother on the bed. Then several people noticed him and came over to him and patted him on the head saying, "My poor boy, how dreadful for you." He did not understand what they meant; he could only stare at his mother who lay there so quiet and white and still with her eyes closed. Suddenly he jumped up and ran to her and before anyone could stop him, he slipped something bright red into her hand, quickly knelt down beside her and gently stroking her face, his voice eager with enthusiasm whispered into her ear, "I got it, mom; I got it for you for your birthday."

SHORT STORY THIRD PRIZE

THE WAGER

By GRACE KROENING

Synopsis:

On a torrid summer day John, Dave and Leon stop for a rest from their bike-ride by the steep, rocky banks of a cool river. With Leon, the most daring in the lead, they climb to the bottom to their destination in the shade of a bridge. John, slightly irritated by being in the rear refers to a brain concussion Leon had, which sent him to the hospital for two weeks, telling him he ought to be careful. Leon is very sensitive on this point, feeling he lost face as a result of the accident. Because Leon was not easily shaken by this statement John changes his tactics. He has a very keen instinct for discovering and capitalizing on the weaknesses of others.

"Bet you don't have the nerve to go out on that catwalk to the second pillar."

Outwardly Leon remains calm. "How much?"

"Fifty cents."

"Don't kid yourself. For that money I'd go a tenth of the way out to it. You multiply that amount by ten, payable tomorrow, and I'll climb out to the third post and all the way down the ladder." Almost immediately Leon regrets having said this, but it's too late to back out now.

John has no idea where he can get that kind of money, but he decides to call Leon's bluff and worry about that later. "O.K., I'll give you an I.O.U. for it right now."

Leon just nods, studies the bridge for a moment, and walks out to the catwalk. Dave, who until now has taken little interest in the proceedings, begins to wonder if that brain concussion has done permanent damage. Birds nest along those catwalks; their mess would not make the climbing any easier. The ladders leading down the pillars are little used probably rusty. Mention these things to Leon and he would just grin, figuring the climb would be even more interesting now.

He starts along the catwalk, crawling very slowly on hands and knees over the cool metal. He was nervous at first, his hands almost shaking, but now as he passes the first pillar. Still over dry land, he relaxes, assuming his usual composure and bland smile. His thoughts run more to the five dollars than to the water below: the second pillar is already ten feet behind him, and he is well over the mighty Mississippi. An experienced climber, he knows better than to look down and instead looks back every once in a while toward the bank, waving to the boys thereon. The chattering of birds, annoyed at this intruder in their midst, inform him to this effect in no uncertain terms.

The third pillar, about one-third of the way across the swiftly-flowing current is directly under him: he climbs down on it to very carefully. "Almost slipped, I'll have to watch it," he mutters as he jerks himself erect again. He descends the rungs of the ladder carefully, testing each one for firmness before he steps.

Meanwhile, on the bank, Dave frowns: "That guy must really be hard up—for money and for brains."

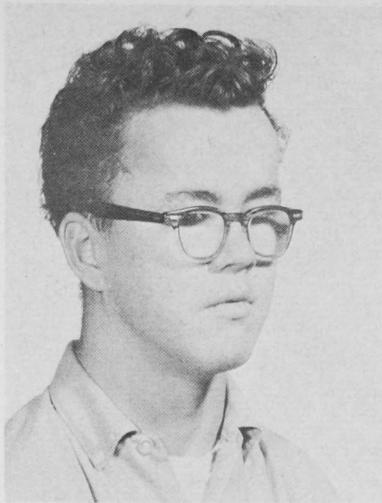

John counters, "He's earning his five dollars," in a tone of voice that does not quite reflect his true mood.

Leon had had the foresight to count the steps on the ladder before beginning this venture in order that he could keep his eyes straight ahead. He's already looked down once: this action has not made his descent any more reassuring. This is the sixteenth step his lower foot is touching now—or is it the seventeenth? He takes a deep breath and looks down. 1, 2, 3 steps. Yes it is the seventeenth. He tamps it firmly with his left foot. The step is loose! For a moment he is tempted to turn back. But he has not completed his show. A circus performer does not leave the ring in the middle of an act. He is the only one who knows that step is loose—John, awed as Leon knows he is, wouldn't part with five dollars for an incompleting performance. Slowly, very slowly, he negotiates the last three steps, but alas, to hold on comfortably his hands must grasp that loose step. He examines it closely: both rivets on one side are loose and covered with rust; it is an old bridge. With his usual inexorable logic he decides that if the step has held him thus far, it will hold him a while longer. It gives one an exhilarating sense of power being up there high over the river, where nobody has probably been since the bridge was constructed, having a view of the high majestic river banks. He waves gaily to the boys on the bank again, keeping his position with only one hand and one leg. Now the grand finale: he turns himself around on the ladder so that he faces out, grasping the loose step with both hands, palms turned out. Straightening himself out till he is standing on tip-toes, he suddenly crouches down in the position of a swan diver, giving a little jump with his legs as he does so. But at the instant his legs leave the step, the sudden strain on the loose rung causes it to give 'way, and Leon is plunged grotesquely into the torrential river current, a current that the strongest swimmer in the world couldn't handle. As his head bobs up once, thirteen adventurous years swim before him in this, his last instant of consciousness.

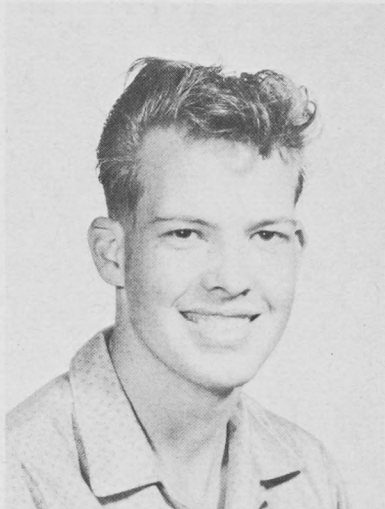

And back on the bank two horror-struck young boys look at each other, one of them imagining a look of sick, unforgiving accusation in the eyes of the other.
